

Organized Stalking

Organized stalking involves multiple individuals that stalk, threaten and harass a targeted individual, or "TI."

Cars are sometimes parked outside the target's house to intimidate them, often with people inside doing apparently nothing.

Another tactic is having neighbors leave and arrive at the same time as the target.

A common occurrence is to have people staring at the target in a leering or mocking way - usually with a smirk on their faces. This is not an uncommon occurrence, but one of several incidents during a single day.

Targets have reported having people say things to them that refer far too specifically to something within their lives. This is a highly effective way of letting the target know s/he is somehow under surveillance without actually doing anything illegal.

Targets sometimes experience intense harassment while driving.

This includes tailgating, being cut off in traffic, and other hostile gestures. Almost all targets report that perpetrators have tried to run them off the road by crowding or mobbing them with their cars. Some have reported being surrounded by a convoy of cars when they've been driving. Organized stalkers may also travel in convoys with their high-beam headlights on.

Objectives of Organized Stalkers

- To try and find ways of getting the target's attention regardless of whether s/he is taking the garbage out in the morning, driving to work or sitting in a local coffee shop.
- To make sure the target knows he is being watched (also known as "sensitizing" the target).
- To provoke any reaction.
- To harass the target.

How Can Organized Stalking Be Counteracted

The best way to fight this is by getting together and supporting one another. By keeping the victims isolated, the perpetrators have little fear of their activities being discovered. But together we have strength. Little by little we can raise the awareness in the public that this is happening. Public awareness is primary to the revelation of the "Organized stalking" activities that "TI's" are experiencing. People who are "TI's" often do not know they are targeted individuals. Therefore, the goal of our organization is to educate the general public about the tactics and technology that are being used to torture, torment, and covertly control individuals, or large populations.

The more information that is available to the general public will in effect bring about the eradication of organized stalking activity.
